

TICK.
TICK.
TICK.

It's only a matter of time. Almost every silicone gel breast implant eventually ruptures, releasing chemicals into the body. Silicone implants have harmed hundreds of thousands of women and cost taxpayers millions of dollars. In 1992, serious concerns about safety prompted the FDA to restrict them. Now, under pressure from manufacturers, the FDA plans to put silicone implants back on the market — without adequate research. Go to www.stopsilicone.org, and tell the FDA that what we don't know about silicone breast implants will hurt us.
