COVER STORY: YOUNG AND LIVING WITH BIPOLAR DISORDER

Bipolar disorder, previously known as manic depression, manifests as alternating states of elated mood and unexplained depression. Once the disorder was thought to only afflict adults, but now it seems kids are being diagnosed as well. Jeffrey Kluger looks at the neurological basis of, and the symptoms associated with, the disorder, and why 5,000 patients are about to embark on a five-year study to find a viable treatment.

THE PALESTINIANS: WHERE TO NOW?

The Palestinians once had faith that history would vindicate their cause. But after 22 months of bitter fighting, they aren't sure who they are anymore, or which way to turn. Matt Rees takes a look at life in an embattled society.

HEALTH: THE SECRET OF FEELING FULL

Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could pin down the hormones that make us hungry and counteract them with those that make us feel full? Well, scientists have discovered a natural hormone that turns out to be a powerful appetite suppressant. Christine Gorman presents this health report and asks if the discovery will lead to safe new anti-obesity drugs.

ARTS & MEDIA

The author of a new book offers a glimpse of evolution in action, as chimps in Uganda take up arms. Eugene Linden takes us on an evolutionary journey The Octopus and the Orangutan. Jess Cagle previews Insomnia, a soon-to-be-released thriller, and the blossoming career of its director Christopher Nolan. Plus, Michael Fitzgerald introduces some unknown explorers from a wide-ranging survey of art from the Pacific.
