TIME

June 10, 2002

COVER STORY: IRRATIONAL THOUGHT OR ANXIETY DISORDER?

What makes us worry, nervous, or anxious to a point where it interferes with our lives? Will the shock of 9/11 ever wear off for those who are susceptible to anxiety? In a comprehensive report, Christine Gorman explores how the brain is hardwired for fear, the forms of disorder observed when the brain short-circuits, and the types of therapy that are available.

WORLD CUP 2002: ARGENTINA'S SELECTION DILEMMA

World Cup fever has officially swept across the continents. In the second installment of TIME's coverage, Aparisim Ghosh looks at the dilemma of Argentina's coach Marcelo Bielsa, the excruciating choice between two of the greatest strikers on earth. Also, Hannah Beech looks at the team from China, a nation known as the proud creator of the sport with a millennium of undistinguished play. Will a winning coach with an optimistic philosophy finally put the pioneer's team on the map?

TERRORISM: HOW FAR SHOULD THE FBI GO?

Since the 13-page bombshell memo brought the bureau to its knees last week, the FBI has begun changing its rules to make amends, shifting the focus to crime prevention and the mission to domestic intelligence. Michael Duffy & Nancy Gibbs examine these radical new rules that give field agents decentralized decision-making power in launching investigations and inquiries on any suspected terrorist groups.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

An exhibition of Matisse and Picasso side by side illustrates the artistic rivalry between the two great creators of all time. Ann Morrison takes a close look at the achievements of the two masters embodied in their unique artistry. Upon the launch of Eminem's third album, The Eminem Show, Josh Tyrangiel breaks down the three faces of Eminem as the controversial rapper finally stands up and pleads not guilty to toxic influence by reason of artistic integrity. Plus, James Iverne reviews Madonna's stage performance in David Williamson's London production Up for Grabs.
